OUR VISION

The Power of the Spirit

The Holy Spirit features prominently in our readings today — the psalm response reminds us that the words of the Book of the Law (The Torah; the first five books of the Old Testament) are spirit and life. The Holy Spirit who hovered over the face of the earth in creation (Genesis 1:2) was the inspiration of the writing of the law.

The second reading tells us that we are all baptised in the one Holy Spirit, and that it is the Holy Spirit “given to us all to drink” that gives us all our own particular vocation within the Church.

In the Gospel we read of how Jesus, “with the power of the Spirit in him” (Luke 4:14) preaches in Galilee, and in particular in Nazareth where he quotes from Isaiah: “The Spirit of the Lord has been given to me, he has anointed me”. He goes on to state what might be called his manifesto: “He has sent me to bring the Good News to the poor, to proclaim liberty to captives and to the blind new sight, to set the downtrodden free, to proclaim the Lord’s year of favour”. (Luke 4:18-19; Isaiah 61:1-2)

Having read the Gospel, we can return to the second reading and recognise that just as the Holy Spirit filled Jesus, so too we were baptised into the same Holy Spirit. We must never forget the significance of our baptism.

We remind ourselves of this every time we enter the Church, take Holy Water and make the sign of the Cross. Today St Paul reminds us that we were baptised in the one Holy Spirit (1 Corinthians 12:13) and therefore, just as the power of the Holy Spirit filled Jesus, so it also fills us.

The Holy Spirit has the same manifesto today as always, and that which Jesus came to do, the Church must now continue. St Paul tells us that none of us is required to fulfil every part of this, but we are all called to fulfil some part of it.

Each element of the manifesto can be understood in two ways, materially and spiritually. The good news that the Church is called to bring is most obviously understood as the bringing of the Gospel; that God loves us and in Jesus has brought forgiveness and reconciliation and the promise of eternal life. But missionaries have always brought more than just that: missions have included hospitals and medical care, schools and other material benefits. Today and here, the bringing of the Good News is not just the word of the love of God but also that love made visible in our care for the afflicted. Our manifesto is not just words, but actions too (1 John 3:18, Hebrews 4:12).

The proclamation of liberty to captives does not mean unlocking every prison cell, and first of all, relates to the liberty of those held in captivity to sin. The spiritual meaning of this is clear; God wishes to forgive us. This is beautifully illustrated in the parable which we call the “prodigal son”, but really is about the prodigality of the father. We read that the Father saw the son coming home when he was a long way off (Luke 15:20) and must understand that God is looking for those who have wandered from him to come home.

However, there is also a material way in which we see this element of the manifesto — we must be champions of justice in every area of life, and especially in economic justice. This relates particularly to the last two elements of the manifesto.

The giving of new sight to the blind most obviously relates to physical healing, and we read of a number of healings of Jesus which are giving sight to the blind (Matthew 9:27-31, Mark 10:46-52, John 9:1-7 for example). The Church, in supporting medical work continues this work, but the giving of sight “to the inly blind” (“Thou whose Almighty Word”, John Marriott, Hymn 689, verse 2) is the spiritual understanding of this element. The word “see” can mean “understand” as in “I see”, and an important part of the mission of the Church is to help everyone to understand why they were created (God made me to know him, to love him and to serve him in this world, and to be happy with him forever in the next. Penny Catechism, §2) and to give meaning to life beyond the simply material.

The “setting the downtrodden free” clearly relates to the mission of the Church in seeking justice and peace for all people, and while in many ways the Church has been active in this, the world is still full of injustice in so many ways. The unjust distribution of wealth and opportunity, of health-care and education are obvious examples of this, and injustice is so often the cause of wars, and wars increase the injustice in that it is predominantly the poorest who pay the highest price of war. Among those who survive, many become refugees and face a further injustice as other countries turn them away or ill-treat them by creating a “hostile environment” for them.

Finally we come to the last element of the manifesto, and this relates to the Old Testament understanding of the year of Jubilee when all debts would be cancelled and there would be a restoration of the equality of creation. Exiles should be allowed home and slaves released. Although the Torah demands this, there is little evidence that it ever took place, hence the significance of Jesus’ proclamation of the “Lord’s year of favour” at his coming.

Each one of us should be able to recognise at least one of these manifesto elements in which we have a part to play, because we are all part of the one body which is Christ, and empowered by the Spirit we are able to fulfil that vocation.

The description of Jesus as God's "beloved Son" takes us back to two weeks ago, when, at his Baptism, we hear the voice from heaven say "You are my Son, the Beloved" (Luke 3:22).

While we pray that we may "abound in good works", we also acknowledge that before this can happen, our actions must be directed by God.

Almighty ever-living God,
direct our actions according to your good pleasure,
that in the name of your beloved Son
we may abound in good works.

Through our Lord Jesus Christ, your Son who lives and reigns with you in the unity of the Holy Spirit, one God, for ever and ever. Amen.

If we make this prayer with sincerity, we are asking God that we may be obedient to the will of God.

We should remember another time when there was a voice from heaven: "This is my Son, the beloved. Listen to him." (Luke 9:35). We must indeed listen to him.

Scripture Readings 27th January 2019, 3rd Sunday in Ordinary Time, Year C

In 538 BC King Cyrus of Persia helped the Israelites to return to Jerusalem from exile in Babylon. There Ezra and Nehemiah shared the tasks of re-establishing the Jewish state and religion. Nehemiah rebuilt the city's walls and administration. In today's reading we hear about Ezra's formal reading of the Jewish Law, and the people's joyous celebration of God's gift of the Law.

The psalm praises God's moral law – and asks forgiveness for our transgressions.

In Paul's letter to the Corinthians he compares a community to the human body. Every Christian becomes part of Christ's body by baptism. So all gifts come from the spirit; all gifts are necessary; all contribute to the good of the whole community. All Christians are equally valuable and wanted by God.

Our reading of Luke's Gospel over the ordinary Sundays of Year C now resumes, to be interrupted only for Eastertide. First we are reminded of Luke's reason for writing a gospel: he is carefully putting into an orderly sequence what he has heard from eye-witnesses, so that his hearers may "realise the certainty of the teachings" they have received. Today's reading then continues from the beginning of Jesus' ministry in Galilee, including his self-proclamation in his home town. Next week we hear his neighbours' reactions.

Psalm Response:

Your words are spirit, Lord, and they are life.

(Neh 8: 2-10; Psalm 18(19); 1 Cor 12: 12-30; Luke 1: 1-4; 4: 14-21)

Chris Oliver

Saints of the Week

St Thomas Aquinas

Thomas was born in Roccasecca in central Italy in 1225, and after studying at the university of Naples, and there decided to join the recently-formed Dominican order. His family disapproved of this and kidnapped him and held him captive for a year. He escaped and went to Paris where he continued his studies.

After a number of teaching appointments, in 1265 he was summoned to Rome to serve as the Papal theologian, and it was during this time that he wrote his most famous book "Summa Theologiae" which to this day remains the foundation of Catholic philosophy and theology.

In 1263 a priest travelling on pilgrimage to Rome was having doubts about the real presence of Christ in the Blessed Sacrament. Having stopped overnight at Bolsena, he said Mass the following morning and found that following the consecration, the host started to bleed. As a result of this miracle, Pope Urban IV instituted the feast of Corpus Christi, and asked Thomas to write hymns to honour the Blessed Sacrament. Best known among them are "Tantum Ergo" and "O Salutaris", both parts of longer hymns. Another Eucharistic hymn of St Thomas, "Lauda Sion" is sadly seldom sung although it remains as an optional text in the Mass for Corpus Christi.

In 1273 Thomas had a mystical experience in which Christ said to him: "You have written well of me". Following this, he never wrote anything else, and the following year he died.

St John Bosco

John Bosco was born in August 1815, just two months after the defeat of Napoleon at Waterloo, but the Napoleonic wars had ravaged the area of northern Italy and his parents' village of Becchi, not far from Turin, in the province of Asti (famous for its sparkling wine!). Not only did the villager suffer from the devastation of war; there was also a drought and famine. To add to the family's difficulties, his father died when he was two, leaving his mother with three young children to care for and bring up.

As a child he saw a travelling circus and was enthralled by the conjurers and their tricks, and he set out to learn how to do them himself. He used them to entertain his friends, but then used the opportunity to invite them to pray with him. It was while doing this that he realised that God was calling him to be a priest.

Lacking any formal education, he found a priest ready to teach him, and at the age of 20, was able to enter the seminary, and was ordained in 1841 and sent to a parish in Turin, which was, like so many cities, in the throes of the industrial revolution, with much poverty and slum housing.

Using his ability to perform, he attracted the attention of the street children, and sought to bring them to Christ. He was a follower of the gentle way taught by St Francis de Sales, and founded the order now called the Salesians of Don Bosco, and opened a number of schools. One of his principles states: "Young people must not only be loved; but they must know they are loved."
